THIS STUDY WAS CONCERNED WITH THE PROBLEM OF DEFINING THE CONTENT OF THE CURRICULUM FOR MASTER'S DEGREE PROGRAMS IN LIBRARY SCIENCE. THE SPECIFIC AREA EXPLORED BASIC OR INTRODUCTORY REFERENCE. THE STUDY WAS DESIGNED TO (1) OBTAIN THE JUDGMENTS OF PRACTICING REFERENCE LIBRARIANS RELATIVE TO THE USEFULNESS OF A SELECTED LIST OF BASIC REFERENCE SOURCES, (2) AID TEACHERS OF REFERENCE IN EVALUATING THE CONTENT OF THEIR BASIC REFERENCE COURSES, AND (3) PROVIDE FURTHER POSSIBLE AID IN THE EVALUATION OF REFERENCE COLLECTIONS AND IN THE SELECTION OF ADDITIONAL TITLES. THREE TABULATIONS WERE MADE FROM DATA GATHERED BY QUESTIONNAIRES--(1) RESPONSES FOR EACH ITEM BY TYPE AND SIZE OF LIBRARY, (2) TITLES ADDED TO THE LIST BY THE RESPONDENTS, AND (3) TITLES NOT HELD BY RESPONDING LIBRARIANS. LISTS OF VITAL REFERENCE SOURCES (THOSE REFERRED TO CONSTANTLY AS REPORTED BY RESPONDENTS) FURNISH THE BASIS FOR CURRICULUM CONTENT . THE INVESTIGATOR CONCLUDED THAT THE SPREAD OF TITLES FOUND USEFUL VARIES WIDELY FROM THE LARGE TO THE SMALL INSTITUTIONS. THIS SUGGESTS THAT THE BASIC REFERENCE COURSE WHICH AIMS TO PREPARE BOTH FOR LARGE UNIVERSITY AND PUBLIC LIBRARY REFERENCE WORK AND FOR SMALL PUBLIC AND SCHOOL LIBRARIES MUST AIM AT THE LARGEST AREA OF AGREEMENT UPON REFERENCE TITLES, NOT THE AREA OF LEAST AGREEMENT. IT IS RECOMMENDED THAT THE MINIMUM LIST OF TITLES TAUGHT IN BASIC REFERENCE COURSES SHOULD INCLUDE THE TITLES RATED VITAL BY HALF OR MORE OF THE REFERENCE LIBRARIANS OF PH.D. INSTITUTIONS SERVING ENROLLMENTS OF 20,000 OR MORE. (WB)

Use of Basic Reference Sources in Libraries

Problem on which the research was focused

One of the urgent problems facing library education at the present time is the need for a more exact definition of the content of the core curriculum--that body of knowledge which should be the common possession of all graduates of master's degree programs in library science. This study attempts to furnish data requisite to the formulation of that definition in one of the core areas, basic or introductory reference (as distinguished from the advanced subject bibliography courses). It is an underlying assumption of this investigator that library science is a professional discipline; that as such there is a core of knowledge which all its practitioners ought to hold in common; that basic or introductory reference forms part of that core. It is a further assumption of this writer that the basic or introductory course ought to emphasize those reference titles which are most frequently used in daily reference work. This particular study, therefore, attempts to ascertain which basic or general reference works are most frequently used in college, university, junior college, secondary school, and public libraries of varying sizes.

There is a second problem in library education which has been the focus of much discussion--and several regional conferences--in recent years upon which these results have some bearing. That problem has been rather cumbrously named "the problem of articulation of undergraduate and graduate education." There are two aspects to the problem: (1) Should the core curriculum be taught at the graduate or undergraduate level? (2) How can we assure that a student from an undergraduate program will find his courses acceptable on a nation-wide basis in the schools offering a graduate program? With the first issue, this study has nothing to do. But the second is clearly related to the effort described in the preceding paragraph. Before there can be articulation of graduate and undergraduate reference courses on a nation-wide scale, the graduate schools will have to agree among themselves upon the content of the introductory reference course. As long as the several accredited schools define that content in significantly various ways, there can be no hope that an undergraduate course will be equally acceptable to all the accredited schools. With these problems in mind, then, the following objectives were sought in this study:

Objectives

(1) To obtain the judgments of practicing reference librarians relative to the usefulness of a selected list of basic reference sources

(2) To aid teachers of reference in evaluating the content of their basic reference courses (with respect to that part of the course which is concerned with the study of actual titles)

3) To provide one further possible aid in the evaluation of reference collections and a possible aid in selection of additional titles. (The questionnaire list was actually used as a source of titles for purchase by a number of responding librarians.)

Related research

In 1960, the present investigator concluded a study of the titles being taught in basic reference at that time among a number of the then accredited schools. The results were issued as the Composite List of Titles Taught in Basic Reference by 25 of the Accredited Library Schools. The study revealed less agreement among the 25 responding schools than had been expected. It did, however, discover that half or more of the schools were in agreement in teaching 115 titles in common. In the interests of identifying the core list, this group of 115 titles was held in readiness for comparison with the "core" list of the practicing reference librarians. Since the schools' list is important for this present investigation, it has been included in Appendix E.

The study of the schools shows that 1,202 titles appeared on the lists of the 25 responding schools. Of this group, the 115 titles mentioned above were agreed on by half or more of the schools. This constituted approximately 9 per cent of the 1,202 titles. On the other hand, 47 per cent of the total number of titles were listed by only one school. Only five titles out of the 1,202 were agreed upon by all 25 responding schools. These titles--which surely should be crowned with a crown of gold!--were the Americana, Britannica, and World Book encyclopeidas and two dictionaries: the New English and Funk & Wagnall's New Standard.

Procedure

A list of 352 basic reference titles was distributed to 1,750 reference librarians representing college, university, secondary school, and public libraries of various sizes. The list of 352 titles included substantially all those titles which were being taught by at least one-quarter of the 25 schools responding in the 1960 study. A few titles were added--such as the Third Edition of Webster's New International, which had appeared subsequent to that study--and one was dropped (the supplement to Who's Who in America, which ceased publication). Essentially, therefore, the reference librarians were being asked to evaluate the usefulness of the titles which the schools were teaching (although they were not told this). This procedure would--as a sort of serendipitous by-product--cast some light on the assumption sometimes made by some individuals that the schools and the field are far apart.

A number of respondents, unaware of the basis for inclusion of titles, added notes to one or another section, expressing their disapproval of some aspect of the lists. They had apparently assumed that the lists were being presented as some sort of model. They made such remarks as the following:

> "I do not understand why you have so many juvenile dictionaries on a general list."
>
> "If there is a Catholic encyclopedia on the list, we felt we should add a Protestant one."
>
> "Why so few foreign language dictionaries?"
>
> "Balance seems poor on this part."
>
> "Some of these are not handbooks!"
> "Why is this title on the directories list and not on the handbooks list?"

Many of these questions, of course, are answered by the fact that the questionnaire lists were not "selected" by this investigator, but were the result of applying the "taught by at least one-quarter" rule. The last two questions, concerning the placement of titles on a given list, can best be answered by describing the procedure followed in compiling the original composite list. The individual lists of the 25 schools were divided in various ways, and the same headings were by no means used by all schools. The rule hit upon was simply this: to list a book under whatever heading it was placed by the first school listing it. To those who might object to such a procedure, let it be remarked that the purpose of the original study was not to devise a perfect classification for general reference books. The investigator was concerned only to discover which titles were being taught and by how many schools each title was taught. It made no difference whether a given title was listed under "humanities" by one school and under "biography" by another.

In the additional titles sample resulting from this present study, the same rule has been followed. Not all reference librarians who added the same title put it under the same heading. Its "proper" classification is not an issue of interest in this study. The author invites the reader to feel free to move titles about from list to list if it pleases him.

The development of the mailing sample occupied considerable time, since a sample was sought which reflected distribution by type of library, by size within type, by geographical location, and destination of library school graduates. Special libraries were excluded from the sample since it was felt that their reference work would be so largely devoted to highly specialized subject areas that these "general reference" tools would not be as important as in other types of libraries. When the division of the number of questionnaires to be allotted to each remaining type of library was made, an effort was made to achieve a fairly even balance among the three types--college/university, school, and public libraries. This balance includes a prior assumption on the part of the investigator that junior college libraries and secondary school libraries should be considered as one group. It was believed that their collections would be more likely to resemble each other--on the whole, of course, individual exceptions being overlooked--than junior college collections would resemble those of the four year colleges. Distribution within each type by size of institution (i.e., by size of population served) was not according to strict proportion of number of libraries in each size group to the total number of libraries. Had this been the case, the number of public libraries serving populations under 10,000 would have been much larger. If one considers, on the other hand, not numbers but total population served, he recalls that almost two-thirds of the American population is served by only 10 per cent of the public libraries. Furthermore, library school graduates are more likely to find their way to larger library systems, rather than to village libraries. And, lastly, the larger libraries are more likely to have titles to evaluate. In all groups, emphasis has been on the larger institutions, which receive a number of questionnaires disproportionate to their part of the total number of libraries of their type. (The absolute number, of course, may look smaller, compared with other size groups within the type of library.) On the other hand, geographical distribution was adhered to closely--each state was assigned that percentage of the total questionnaire sample of a given type and size of library which represented its percentage of the total national number of that type and size. Thus, for example, if a state had 15 per cent of the total number of public libraries serving populations of 50,000-99,999, it would get 15 per cent of the number of questionnaires sent to libraries in that group. The mailing sample developed as follows:

Ph.D. degree granting institutions....	75
Master's degree granting..............	200
Bachelor's degree granting............	300
Junior colleges.......................	75
Secondary schools.....................	500
Public libraries......................	600

Thus the major groups divided into 575 questionnaires to colleges and universities; 575 to junior colleges and secondary schools; 600 to public libraries (as a small bow in the direction of their far greater total number).

Despite all the effort lavished upon the mailing sample, the extensive mathematical maneuverings embarked upon, the pride felt when it finally met all the stipulations laid upon it, it turned out to be, quite naturally, a mere chimera. The real sample consists of the libraries which actually returned the questionnaire. Of the 1,750 libraries to which questionnaires were sent, 1,090 (slightly over 62 per cent) responded. This response was considered highly gratifying, especially since the investigator had been assured that it was unlikely that he would receive 20 per cent. No follow-up was made (although this might have increased the return somewhat), since a 62 per cent return gave a more than adequate sample of the various types and sizes. Furthermore, the distribution by type of library in the return sample was very close to the original mailing sample. The largest variation occurred in the junior college and school library group, where the final return sample was down 3.2 per cent from the original share of the mailing sample. The college-university group was up a little over 2 per cent, and the public library share was up about 1 per cent. The actual return sample--including only the 1078 questionnaires out of 1090 which were used in the final tabulations--ran as follows:

Ph.D. degree granting institutions.....	57
Master's degree granting..............	134
Bachelor's degree granting............	188
Junior colleges.......................	45
Secondary schools.....................	274
Public libraries......................	380

The percentage of return by groups ran from a (very high) low of 54.8 per cent in the school libraries to a high (remarkable!) of 76 per cent among the Ph.D. degree granting institutions. Summaries of the samples, and a list of respondents, will be found in Appendix A.

A third sample developed among those librarians who added titles to the questionnaire list of 352 titles. A blank page had been inserted after each "type of reference work" list for the adding of any titles which the librarians felt were so useful that they belonged on a basic reference list...and should be taught in a basic reference course. A total of 459 respondents added titles--slightly over 42 per cent of the 1,090 responding librarians. A table showing the distribution of the additional titles sample by size and type of library will be found in Appendix A.

At this point, the author would like to express his sincere appreciation to the 1,090 reference librarians who took time from very busy schedules to fill out and return his questionnaire. Actually, the number of librarians involved exceeds 1,090, since some questionnaires reflect the judgment of the entire reference staff. A special vote of thanks is due the 459 respondents who undertook the task of listing additional titles which they felt were important enough to be appended. The large percentage of returns and the carefulness with which the questionnaires were filled out (many comments, questionings, and other signs of deliberation were found on the pages, indicating that the filling out had not been merely a perfunctory task) are evidence of the serious and conscientious concern with which reference librarians approach their work. The feeling expressed in a number of letters was probably universal--they were willing to expend all the time and effort in the hope that it would make some contribution to the improvement of reference service. The author can only add his own fervent hope that these results will not merely be filed away, as is the fate of too many surveys, but that they will be used where appropriate to improve reference teaching--and perhaps reference collections.

The questionnaire asked the librarians to respond to one of three evaluations of a title:

(1) V--Vital. A reference source referred to constantly, with which every beginning reference librarian should be familiar.

(2) R--Recommended. A source of considerable usefulness, but not as constantly used as titles in the Vital category. Where possible, a beginning reference librarian should know these, but where choices must be made, this group can be sacrificed to those titles in the first category.

(3) P--Peripheral. Infrequent in use.

If a library did not have a title, it was asked not to circle any response. The central question being raised was thus the simple one: "Which titles are most heavily used?" A reference work can, of course, be considered important if it answers only one question a year--or a decade--if no other work will give the answer. But there are some titles which carry the heaviest burden of use and which have to be referred to constantly... the "familiar friends and daily companions," as they have been so aptly described. Since not all of the 10,000 or so reference titles which may be assembled in a large university's central reference room can be considered in a basic reference course, it would seem desirable to introduce the student first to those titles which will get him through the bulk of his daily work. The more remote and esoteric titles can be left for consideration in the advanced bibliography courses. Some of them, indeed, may well wait for the person's attention after they have taken a reference job, for one hopes that the education of a reference librarian is continued beyond the introduction afforded by the one year in library school.

It was made clear in accompanying letters that some librarians had difficulty in restrainting themselves from ranking "V" titles which were not much used, but which are great monuments of scholarship. Some were acutely uncomfortable in equating "importance" with "frequency of use." But they asserted that they had manfully struggled to adhere to frequency as their measure. It is not the contention of the present investigator that the ultimate measure of quality in a reference work is the number of times it is used in a day. He is perfectly aware of the fact that the most authoritative and definitive work on a subject may be much less frequently used than the telephone book--and that this fact does not diminish its stature one iota. He would like to emphasize, however, that in this study the only attempt being made was to ascertain which titles were frequently used--and to remind his readers once again that this study is concerned with "general" reference, not highly specialized subject reference.

When the questionnaires were returned, the responses for each of the 352 items were recorded by type and size of library and the titles added to the lists were also tabulated. The attention of the investigator was directed at the "V" category, and extensive tables of the "V" responses have been included as Part II of this report. It is the compiler's belief that these may form the most useful part of his study for many librarians, who can here see how their colleagues in a given size and type of library felt about the titles listed. It may be that some titles may be suggested to them for consideration for purchase, if they have been found highly useful by a large number of librarians of the same type and size of library, but are not held by a given library. A second area of interest was the additional titles sample. Here the author sought to discover any title felt to be important by a substantial number of librarians which was not being taught by the schools. The third tabulation of considerable interest turned out to be the list of titles not held by the responding librarians--it revealed some surprising lacunae in library collections.

Analyses of the data

General Results

There was no title out of the 352 which the 1,078 responding librarians agreed unanimously to rank "V". Of the 352 titles in the questionnaire lists, half or more of the responding librarians agreed on 73 titles as "V", or about 20.7 per cent. Of 1,069 titles added by respondents, half or more of the 459 librarians who added titles agreed upon no single additional title as "V".

These are the results obtained by shaking together in one huge bottle librarians of the most disparate types and sizes of institutions. Throughout the results, however, when one turns one's attention to specific types and sizes within the large total mass, a fairly consistent pattern emerges: the larger the population served--regardless of the type of library--the larger the number of titles they find "vital," and the more they agree among themselves as to which titles they consider "V." The responses of the reference librarian in a large public library are more like the responses of the reference librarian in a large university library than either's responses are like those of the librarian of a small library of their own type.

"V" Category--Unanimous Agreement

In the 1960 study of the titles being taught in basic reference in the accredited schools, only 5 titles out of the total of 1,202 reported were agreed upon by all 25 responding schools. As was remarked above, the reference librarians--as a whole group--were not in even that modest amount of agreement. No single title was considered "V" by all respondents. If one moves to the various types of libraries, a greater degree of agreement emerges. The 57 Ph.D. degree granting institutions were in unanimous agreement upon 9 titles. These titles, since they bear the imprimatur of 57 of our university reference librarians, should perhaps be listed here. They included Books in Print, CBI, Winchell, Current Biography, Who's Who, Webster's New International (2d ed), Americana, Government Organization Manual, and Readers' Guide.

The reference librarians of master's and bachelor's degree granting institutions, junior colleges, secondary schools, and public libraries did not reach unanimous agreement on any title.

When one moves within the types and considers agreement on the basis of size of institution within type, still larger areas of agreement emerge--among the larger institutions. The librarians of Ph.D. schools over 20,00 were unanimous in listing 54 titles as "V". (For the sake of economy of expression, "degree granting institution" and "with an enrollment of" will be suppressed). At the other extreme, no titles were unanimously agreed upon by the following groups:

> Bachelor's--1000-4999; Under 1000
> Junior college--1000-4999
> Public libraries--50,000-99,999; 10,000-24,999; 5000-9999
> School libraries--2000-2499; 1500-1999; 1000-1499

It is rather surprising to note that the fewer titles owned, the less librarians are likely to agree upon which titles of that smaller number are "vital." One might have assumed that in smaller libraries the reference work done would be less various, less scattered over the wide spectrum between the simple information query and the highly complex, very remote question of the scholarly subject specialist. Given this smaller range, it would seem reasonable to assume that a smaller number of titles would be needed, and that, therefore, the chances of agreement among librarians of small libraries would be greater than among the librarians of large collections. This does not appear to be the case.

"V" Category--Agreement by One-Half or More of the Respondents

In the study of the 25 accredited schools, half or more agreed on 115 titles out of 1,202, or approximately 9.6 per cent. Of the 352 titles listed in the questionnaire, half or more of the respondents agreed on 73, or approximately 20.7 per cent. At first glance, it would seem that the palm must go to the practitioners. However, to make the results more truly comparable, one must take into account the titles added to the questionnaire by the responding librarians. The schools in the original study had no prepared list of titles to which they were to react--they supplied their own lists, which in effect would be the equivalent of the 352 titles plus the additional titles lists. When this adjustment is made, and the 1,069 additional titles are included, one reaches a grand questionnaire total of 1,431, of which half or more of the respondents agreed upon 73, or about 5.1 per cent. Thus the schools did somewhat better in this regard (although not strikingly so, it must be admitted). To put the areas of agreement in terms of numbers of titles: in 1960, half or more of the 25 schools responding were teaching 115 titles in common; in 1962, half or more of 1,078 reference librarians agreed on 73 titles.

Once again, however, when one moves away from the general totals, in which all types and sizes are combined, he finds a steady correlation between size of population served and number of titles agreed on by half or more of the respondents. The larger the population served, the more titles the librarians rank "V"--and the more the several librarians of those larger types are in agreement with each other on specific titles. Half or more of the librarians of Ph.D. schools over 20,000 agreed upon 226 titles as "V". This constitutes over 67 per cent of the 336 titles (out of 352) actually owned by half or more of these schools.

Recommended and Peripheral Categories

The "Recommended" category was--as was remarked above--intended for those titles which were not in as heavy use as those in the "V" category, but which reference librarians felt were used enough to warrant inclusion in a basic reference course if time permitted. Inspection of the results reveals a strong tendency to class a title in the "R" category if it could not be classed "V". Half or more of all respondents classed 69 titles as

"R", compared with 73 classed as "V". Thus a total of 142 (or approximately 40 per cent) were endorsed by half or more of the responding librarians as useful enough to warrant inclusion in a basic reference course.

If one studies the individual titles in close detail, one will discover a tendency for the ranking to fall into two groupings: a "V" or "R" ranking, or no rating at all, indicating that the library did not own the title. The "P" category (peripheral; infrequent in use) was very infrequent in use in this questionnaire. No title of the 352 was called "P" by half or more of the responding librarians.

Zero Category

This category did not appear on the questionnaire, but was employed in the tabulations to indicate that a library did not own a title. This fact was to be signalized by the omission of any circle around V, R, or P. The first general result of studying this category is so self-evident that only the right of the pedagogue to explicate the perfectly obvious leads the author to note it: the larger the population served, the more of these 352 titles a library owned. But the converse becomes quite striking. One always knew that smaller libraries would not have as many titles. It is thought-provoking to have the statistical facts borne home: Public libraries serving populations under 10,000 did not own 75 per cent of these titles; school libraries serving enrollments of 1,000-1,4999 did not own over 75 per cent of them; school libraries serving 1,500-1,999 students did not own over 74 per cent of them; school libraries serving enrollments over 2,500 did not own over 70 per cent.

It is instructive of the nature of reference work in these institutions to note in which categories ownership is heaviest or lightest. Half or more of the 1,078 respondents owned 97 per cent of the handbooks list (a term which here covers a miscellaneous assortment of books) while only 10 per cent of the audio-visual materials list and only 23 per cent of the serials list were held. Over 65 per cent of the indexes, 65 per cent of the directories, over 63 per cent of the bibliographies--do not these large percentages of titles not held suggest something about the nature of the daily reference task in many of these libraries?

To summarize: 160 of the 352 questionnaire titles were not held by half or more of the 1,078 respondents, or approximately 45.4 per cent. The bulk of "non-ownership" was concentrated in the smaller libraries. Public libraries serving under 50,000 people, school libraries, and junior college libraries--each of these three types held less than 50 per cent of the titles on this list. Conversely, bachelor's, master's, and Ph.D. degree granting institutions, and public libraries serving over 50,000 people all held more than 50 per cent of this list, rising to a high of 99.9 (plus) per cent for public libraries serving populations over 500,000.

Additional Titles Sample

Of the 1,069 additional titles listed by 459 respondents, only 2 were agreed upon by more than 20 per cent: (1) the McGraw-Hill Encyclopedia of Science and Technology--32.4 per cent; (2) Worldmark Encyclopedia of of the Nations--20.8 per cent. It may be worth remarking that neither of these titles had been published at the time of the first survey of the schools. Thus the fear that the schools might have been omitting some title of overwhelming importance to reference librarians proves groundless. (Always comparing whole group to whole group, of course.)

The lists of additional titles are included in Appendix C.

Conclusions and implications

The first aim of this study was to furnish data requisite to the formulation of the definition of the "core" of titles which should be included in a basic or introductory reference course. It is the author's belief that the lists of "V" rankings furnish that necessary data. It is also his conviction that these data make two points with relation to the "core": (1) production of a core list is feasible, workable, and practical. The evaluation of reference works is no mysterious, arcane, and mystical enterprise. These data, which represent the evaluations of at least 1,078 reference librarians, can be of signal usefulness in arriving at a "core" list. (2) These data demonstrate that the size of the core list will vary as one's conception of the size of library for which students are being trained varies. A course which aims to prepare students for reference work in a large university or large metropolitan public library must include a wider range of titles than a course aimed, for example, at preparing school librarians or librarians of small public libraries (assuming, of course, that one includes as his only guiding principle immediate applicability of titles to the job situation--which is an unlikely limitation). These data cannot decide for anyone which aims he will pursue, but they can aid him in formulating the best list of titles for his particular purposes. Furthermore, they can afford information which makes the choices clearer and more definite.

The assumption underlying the core reference course is that it will provide all librarians, destined for whatever type of library, with the common preparation they need. The data revealed by this survey provide some problems for consideration in any such core course. A school which has decided, for example, to train reference librafians for work in secondary schools with enrollments under 2,000 would find that, if it it were guided by what half or more of the 154 reference librarians of such schools found vital, it would need to teach only 49 titles. When one compares this figure with the 226 titles that half or more of the reference librarians in Ph.D. degree granting institutions with enrollments over 20,000 ranked "V", one begins to appreciate the spread facing the harried school which has students bound for both types in the same class.

Take another pair of examples: half of the reference librarians of public libraries serving populations over 500,000 report that they rank 181 titles as "V", while the librarians of public libraries serving populations of 5,000-9,999 rank 42 as "V". A reference course aimed at preparing librarians for both large metropolitan and small town libraries faces problems in aiming itself with equal accuracy at both targets simultaneously.

These examples seem to be arguing powerfully for the abandonment of any effort to arrive at a core of titles. But this ought not to be the conclusion of the argument. If one accepts seriously the basis for accreditation of library schools by the American Library Association--among other requirements, that a school must prepare for all types of libraries--then the answer is perfectly clear. The basic reference course which aims to prepare both for large university and public libraries and for small public and school libraries must aim its teaching at the largest area of agreement upon reference titles, not the area of least agreement. It can satisfy the potential reference librarians of large institutions only by giving them a sizeable list of titles to study. The needs of the smaller institutions will be met by this procedure (since many of the titles ranked "V" by them would be found in the larger list), especially if one includes a few extra titles, such as those useful for work with children. In addition, the smaller library well might find some of these additional titles useful, if it owned them. Learning about them in the basic reference course may be the first step toward their eventual acquisition.

Although it is not the province of this author to prescribe for the accredited schools, he would like to suggest--as a tentative figure growing out of this study--a core list of the 226 titles ranked "V" by the Ph.D. institutions serving over 20,000 students, plus about another two dozen titles, to enable one to add those titles not useful in universities, but of importance in other sizes and types, particularly in school libraries and in public library work with children and young people. This would result in a total of 250 titles, or about 16 titles per week in a 15 week semester, or roughly 5 titles per hour of class for a 3 hour course. The student would thus have to study about 3 titles per day, based on a 5 day work week, which does not seem an intolerable burden for a graduate student.

In addition to the implications of these data for library education, there is an issue raised for librarianship in a more general sense. There are a number of states which are working to arrange for the creation of regional reference centers, so that people in smaller communities will have access--indirectly, at least--to vaster reference resources than are presently available to them. These data raise an important question for that enterprise. If one assumes that the librarians of all types of libraries are presently meeting the demands made on their reference services reasonably well with their present collections, then it becomes clear that the reference questions asked in smaller towns and smaller schools must be different from those asked in metropolitan communities and large universities. There are factors which might argue for the reality of such a difference, all deriving from the much more heterogeneous population of the larger places, with its concomitant variety of interests.

If it is true that the reference questions asked in smaller communities are actually different, then in creating regional reference libraries, will we be furnishing people access to reference materials they will never use? That we will be affording them the opportunity to find answers to questions they will never ask? These data suggest that we may be embarked upon such an enterprise. It would seem important to ascertain whether or not the difference in reference work between large and small places really exists--or we may commit a fearful amount of time, money, and scarce librarians to a bootless undertaking.

If it is not true that reference work involves different kinds of questions--and hence different kinds of materials--in large and small towns, then these present data present a very sorry commentary on the reference services of smaller libraries.

Final Comment

The picture presented by the two surveys--one of the schools' basic reference courses, one of the reference librarians' judgments--shows considerable similarity. There is a satisfactory grouping of judgments about a reasonably similar number of titles (115 agreed on by half or more of the schools; 142 recommended by half or more of the reference librarians, with a comforting vote of confidence for the 115 titles, on the whole). There is a similar scattering of endorsements of titles by single insti-titutions, whether library schools or libraries. While there is considerable agreement among half or more of both total groups, the larger the libraries, the higher the degree of agreement. Although this was not brought out in the report on the original Composite List, the same held true for the schools--the larger the institution with which they were connected, the larger the library collection, the larger the enrollment of the library school, the longer the lists tended to be. Thus the schools at the upper end of the size scale tended to resemble in their judgments the reference librarians of the largest universities and public libraries. Smaller schools tended to resemble the smaller libraries in their lists. (Please note especially the verb "tended"--there were some exceptions to this rule in both cases.)

What seems most eminently desirable is that all library education--and one hopes all reference work--will be brought to the highest attainable standard. It is not most productive of progress in the long run if, in any enterprise, we begin by moving our goals downward. In the matter of the basic reference course then, it is urged that the most comprehensive view be taken of reference work, that the schools strive toward the largest and most complete introduction possible in one semester, that they work toward the implementation of a professionally-developed, common body of reference knowledge, which must begin with the very sources from which information is taken--the titles themselves.

A profession which cannot even define the core of its professional knowledge can hardly be surprised if its detractors question its professional character. In the matter of a core of reference works, there is--in the opinion of the present writer--a clearly discernible group of titles important enough to warrant inclusion in any graduate library school's introductory reference course. Common sense suggests that this fact is so, the majority of reference teachers recognize it, the experience of reference librarians confirms it. All that remains is to act on this knowledge--officially and in concert.

Covering Letter and Questionnaire

APPENDIX F

Department of Library Science
University of Michigan
Ann Arbor, Michigan

Dear Colleague:

I am writing to ask your cooperation in evaluating a group of general reference works. One of the vexing problems facing teachers of reference in library schools is the question of which titles to include in the basic reference course. It is my hope that you will be willing to give us the guidance of your judgment and experience. This questionnaire is being sent to 1,750 reference librarians in college, university, public, and school libraries.

I am asking that you check each title on the list under one of three categories--"Vital," "Recommended," or "Peripheral." The categories are explained in the questionnaire, but I would like to take this opportunity to stress the "Vital" category. Would you include in it only those titles which are in such constant and heavy use that you cannot imagine a successful reference librarian who does not know the title thoroughly.

One important qualification: in this study, I am concerned only with "general" reference works, not with the important, but specialized, subject reference titles. After each list, you will find a blank page for listing additional titles which seem to you belong in the "Vital" category. Would you please restrict such titles to "general", to "basic" titles, useful in general reference or information services, rather than special subject works.

All replies will be treated as confidential, and no names of libraries will be used in connection with any title. The only use of the library's name might be to list it among the cooperating institutions, if such a list is appended to the final report to the Office of Education (which made the grant for this study).

I realize that the questionnaire may appear formidable, but I sincerely hope that you will be able to find the time to complete it, since the judgment of the practicing reference librarians will be of the utmost value to those concerned with library education.

A self-addressed, stamped envelope for return of the questionnaire is enclosed for your convenience. If possible, would you please mail the questionnaire by October 15, 1962.

Sincerely yours,

W. J. Bonk

Instructions for Procedure and Explanation of Categories

After each title in this list, three capital letters will be found-- V, R, P. Please circle the letter corresponding to the category in which you would place this title.

If your library does not have a title, please do not circle any of the responses.

The three letters represent the following categories:

V---Vital. A reference source referred to constantly, with which every beginning reference librarian should be familiar.

R---Recommended. A source of considerable usefulness, but not as constantly used as titles in the Vital category. Where possible, a beginning reference librarian should know these, but where choices must be made, this group can be sacrificed to those titles in the first category.

P---Peripheral. Infrequent in use.
